ABSTRACT

In this article, we present our teen leadership group and projects. We describe our "I'm a Student, Too!" campaign and why it is important to raise awareness about Latino/a children and families that live in Isla Vista, California, which has the reputation of being a college town. We outline our group's mandate to create a better, safer, and healthier place where youth and families can grow up. We then describe how we collected data on people's opinions of Isla Vista over the past two years and how we shared this information at town halls, University of California Santa Barbara orientations, and community conferences to make positive changes in our community.

INTRODUCTION--WHO WE ARE

Two years ago when we started our campaign, the University of California Santa Barbara (UCSB) was listed in the top three "party schools" in the country (CBS Broadcasting Inc., 2014). The town where we live, Isla Vista, is next to UCSB and is considered a college party town. Isla Vista is located in the Central Coast of California and is an unincorporated area of 23,000 residents in less than two square miles. Because we don't have the same rights as an incorporated town, it often feels like when our town makes the news for something good, Santa Barbara takes credit; however, if headlines are bad, no one wants to take responsibility. However, Isla Vista is much more than an "unincorporated area" or a "party town"; it is also a place where kids grow up. Many
